CHLOE WARNER STARTS NEW NON-PROFIT: THE DESIGN GIVE PROJECT

San Francisco, CA-- Launched in 2009 by Chloe Warner, The Design Give Project promotes dignity and optimism by improving the environments of other non-profit organizations. “We believe in the transformative power of great design, but know how expensive and time consuming it can be.” Says Warner, “it is humbling and fun to give our services - design, materials and installation to those who need it most.” Warner, the founder of Redmond Aldrich Design, was inspired by her work with the Mary Crocker Trust, a family foundation that gives money to Bay Area environmental and education causes. “On site visits we would meet wonderful people doing amazing work, but I knew they could be happier and more efficient if their environment were better designed.”

This winter the DGP is working with Compass Community Services, a San Francisco shelter network, to conceive and decorate their annual holiday party - an eagerly anticipated tradition for the 400 families they serve. Warner describes the theme as a “magical Dr. Seuss themed wonderland” that will transform the County Fair building into a snowflake filled candy-cane forest.
